Asian Stocks Turn Lower Amid Elevated Bond Yields

Asian stocks turned lower Friday amid elevated bond yields following a spate of central bank rate hikes. Japanese shares erased initial gains as investors weighed inflation data that was stronger than expected and may fuel speculation of a tweak to the nation's ultra-loose monetary policy. The yen strengthened slightly after its recent depreciation stoked expectations of verbal intervention from authorities in Tokyo. Hong Kong stocks dropped as they played catch-up following a holiday Thursday, while mainland markets remained shut. Friday's decline extends the run of losses to four straight days as traders fret that even if China does provide more aid for the economy, it won't have a major impact on markets. "They probably can't ignite animal spirits to the same extent where stimulus will get them into high growth multipliers," Vishnu Varathan, head of economics and strategy at Mizuho Bank Ltd. in Singapore, said on Bloomberg Television. He expects Beijing to try to "cushion" the economy to hold growth just above 5% amid investor concern over regulatory uncertainty, troubles in the property sector and geopolitical tensions. South Korea's benchmark dropped after global index provider MSCI Inc. once again thwarted the nation's bid for an upgrade to developed-market status. Treasury two-year yields hovered around 4.78% and near the highest since March after Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell said the US may need one or two more rate increases in 2023. Rate hikes from policymakers in England, Norway and Switzerland underscored the upward pressure on bond yields. The yields on Australian and Japanese 10-year bonds rose Friday.

Oil Suffers Steep Weekly Decline as Fed Flags Further Tightening

Oil headed for a weekly loss of more than 3% after the Federal Reserve signaled that further rate hikes were needed, bruising appetite for risk, aiding the dollar, and raising the prospect of an economic slowdown. West Texas Intermediate fell toward $69 a barrel after tumbling 4.2% on Thursday. In testimony this week, Fed Chair Jerome Powell signaled further monetary tightening was likely in the second half. That lifted the greenback, dimming the allure of commodities priced in the US currency.

Crypto Traders Fleeing US Crackdown Set Sights on Asian Markets

Asia is fast becoming the new center of gravity for cryptocurrency markets. As US regulators sued three major crypto exchanges this year, billions of dollars of trading volumes have migrated to Asia. That shift could be poised to accelerate as market makers and exchanges move resources to a region where several jurisdictions have introduced regulatory frameworks and are vying for digital-asset traders. Investors and marketplaces are flocking to Singapore, Japan and South Korea and more recently to Hong Kong, which this month introduced a new regulatory regime for crypto. Bitcoin trading activity in predominantly Asian hours have risen this year even as they slumped in US and European hours, data compiled by CryptoQuant show. The token accounts for almost half of crypto's total market value. The resilience in Asian crypto volumes is underpinned by institutional investors who perceive the regulatory environment there as less risky, according to several market participants interviewed by Bloomberg.

Biden and Modi Announce Defense, Chips Deals at White House

US President Joe Biden and Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi announced a series of defense and commercial deals designed to improve military and economic ties between their nations during Thursday's state visit at the White House. General Electric Co. plans to jointly manufacture F414 engines with state-owned Indian firm Hindustan Aeronautics Ltd. for the Tejas light-combat aircraft, as part of an effort to improve defense- and technology-sharing as China becomes more assertive in the Indo-Pacific.

Amazon to Spend $100 Million Helping Cloud Clients with AI

Amazon.com Inc.'s cloud unit is building a program to help customers develop and deploy new kinds of artificial intelligence products as the biggest seller of cloud services tries to match Microsoft and Google in the market for so-called generative AI. Amazon Web Services is investing $100 million to set up the AWS Generative AI Innovation Center, which will link customers with company experts in AI and machine learning. They'll help a range of clients in health care, financial services and manufacturing build customized applications using the new technology. Highspot, Twilio, Ryanair and Lonely Planet will be early users of the innovation center, Amazon said. The goal is to help sell more cloud services, convincing clients to turn to AWS as they build new generative AI applications rather than Microsoft Corp.'s Azure, which has seized an early lead owing to its partnership with ChatGPT maker OpenAI, or Alphabet Inc.'s Google, which pioneered much of the early technology underpinning this new frontier.
